new candidates for the treatment of microbes.

Conclusion: In this series 5-methylpyrazine-2-carboxylic acid was used as starting material to synthesize designed compounds structures were established on the basis of IR and ¹HMR data. Compounds 3 and 3f have showed excellent antibacterial and antifungal activity against Aspergillus niger, Staphylococcus aureus and Escherichia coli. It was interesting and encouraging to note that all the compounds established high anti bacterial activity than standard drug ofloxacin against Staphylococcus aureus. The results indicate that the pyrazine containing oxadiazole derivatives are potential compounds for use in the designing of new candidates for the treatment of microbes.

PROTECTIVE ROLE OF LACTUCA SATIVA LINN. AND ITS FRACTIONS IN SCOPOLAMINE-INDUCED AMNESIA IN MICE

University Institute of Pharmaceutical Sciences, Panjab University, Chandigarh-160014, India. E-mail: sunilima.choudhary1604@gmail.com, jprok_pu@hotmail.com

Objective: Alzheimer's disease (AD) is a progressive neurodegenerative disorder characterized by a gradual decline in cognitive functions. Diet and life style habits plays an important role in controlling/delaying such neurodegenerative disorders. Ample research has proposed that consumption of 'Mediterranean diet' significantly reduces or delays the risk of developing AD. Lactuca sativa Linn. (Asteraceae), commonly known as 'lettuce', is an important part of Mediterranean diet. Traditionally, the plant has been used to improve memory in old people, and its alcoholic extract has also exhibited neuroprotective effects in in vitro studies. In the present study, the plant and its various fractions has been evaluated for its efficacy against scopolamine-induced memory impairment in mice and also uphold its traditional use as a memory enhancer.

Methods: The standardized alcoholic extract of L. sativa (LSAE) at 50, 100 and 200 mg/kg, p.o. and its fractions (petroleum ether, ethyl acetate, n-butanol and aqueous) at different doses were evaluated against scopolamine-induced amnesia in mice. The effect on memory was assessed using elevated plus maze, novel object recognition and Morris water maze tests followed by biochemical estimations [acetylcholinesterase, malondialdehyde, nitrite, superoxide dismutase, reduced glutathione and catalase levels].

Results: LSAE (200 mg/kg) and its n-butanol fraction (15 mg/kg) exhibited maximum reversal of scopolamine induced behavioral and biochemical alterations.

Discussion & Conclusions: These findings validate the traditional claims of memory enhancing activity of L. sativa, and also suggest that the activity is mediated via its antioxidant and acetylcholinesterase inhibitory action.

Objective: The asthma is disease of respiratory tract, average 180000 deaths occur annually according to survey of W.H.O. The objective of present study is to evaluate antiasthmatic potential of Feronia elephantum bark.

Methods: The bark of Feronia elephantum was collected and identified from college of agriculture biotechnology Loni. The dried powder of Feronia elephantum bark was subjected to extraction by using petroleum ether, Ethyl acetate, methanol and ethanol as a solvent in soxhlet apparatus. The chemical test was performed for various extract to detect primary and secondary metabolites. The extracts were screened for antiasthmatic activity by Milk induced Leukocytosis in Mice, Milk induced Eosinophilia in Mice, and Effect of Histamine on isolated guinea pig ileum models.

Results: The antiasthmatic activity was evaluated by various models in mice, the mice is pretreated with milk by i.c route. The Leukocytosis and eosinophil count is measured, the results shows that there is increase in count. Extract of Feronia elephantum was given after 24 Hr. by i.p. route. After extract treatment there was decrease in count. In isolated guinea pig model bark extract exhibited a dose-dependent inhibition of contractions of the guinea pig ileum induced by histamine. Petroleum ether extract shows significant activity as compare to other extracts of F. elephantum bark.

Conclusion: The present study was aimed to evaluate antiasthmatic potential of bark of F. elephantum. Petroleum ether extract of F. elephantum shows significant activity as compare to other extract and standard drug.

Conclusion: Antiasthmatic activity of Feronia elephantum bark was performed by various models. The petroleum ether extract shows significant activity as compare to other extracts. All these findings reveal the antiasthmatic activity of Feronia elephantum bark. This may be due to the presence of rich contents flavonoids and phenols.

ABSTRACT

Present study reports formulation of herbal ointment from Ficus bengalensis leaves. The ointment was evaluated for analgesic activity as various herbal formulations are used in Ayurvedic system of medicine for the treatment of inflammation & pain. The Ficus bengalensis leaves belongs to Moraceae family traditionally used for reducing pain, the plant reports useful secondary metabolites. By considering potency of Ficus bengalensis our study was aimed to evaluate efficacy of herbal formulation using different animal models such as hot plate analgesiometer, acetic acid inducing writhing in mice. The results indicated that herbal ointment possess good analgesic activity in the experimental animal models.

ABSTRACT

The aim of the present review was to focus the current understanding of the Cytotoxic role of Nitric Oxide (NO). NO is an important cellular signaling molecule involved in many physiological and pathological processes. NO is synthesized from arginine by isoform of NO synthases (NOS) enzymes. There are three isoforms of the NOS enzyme. Importantly, various studies have shown that all three isoforms of NOS, (iNOS, eNOS and nNOS), have been detected in tumour cells from a wide range of isolates. As a consequence of its importance in neuroscience, physiology, and immunology, nitric oxide was proclaimed "Molecule of the Year" in 1992. NO is an effector molecule essential in the antitumor, antimicrobial, and antiviral action of activated immune cells.

Key words- Cytostatics.

Abstract

GST is expected to be a game-changing move for the Indian economy in the medium to long term since it will flourish a common Indian market and reduce the cascading effect of tax on the cost of goods and services. If implemented, GST will result in a complete overhaul of the Indian indirect tax system with wide-ranging implications including tax structure, tax incidence, tax computation, tax payment, compliances, and credit utilization and reporting. It is also expected that supply chain and other operational planning opportunities and efficiencies may be available, depending on a company's facts. However, in the short-term/transitional phase, all industry, including the pharmaceutical industry, are likely to face a number of challenges, including possibly negative financial impacts, the need to assess existing supply chain structures, the need for reconfiguration of IT systems and more. It is, therefore, critical that companies become well known for the proposed GST legislation, begin assessing the impacts that GST is likely to have on their business operations and begin to develop/implement a plan to manage this mega-change by the expected implementation date. The implementation of GST would have a constructive effect on Healthcare industries particularly Pharma. It will help the industries by seeing out the taxation structure since 8 different types of taxes are enforced on pharmaceutical industries today. The merger of all the taxes into one uniform tax will ease the way of doing business. GST would also improve the transportation and supply chain of pharmaceutical product.

Keywords : GST legislation, Healthcare industries, pharmaceutical industries, uniform tax.

Abstract

The Indian pharmaceutical industry is the principal supplier of generic drugs all over the world, with 80% of all AIDS drugs produced in India. The UN has provided licenses to six Indian pharmaceutical labs to make generic anti-AIDS medicine for all the developing nations. Indian pharmaceutical companies manufacture 20% of all generic drugs used around the world.

Most of the drugs mentioned under the 5% bracket are used to cure malaria, HIV-AIDS, tuberculosis, and diabetes which were previously charged VAT around 4%. Nicotine polacrifex gum is the only pharmaceutical product to be charged at the rate of 18%. Cipla, the brand which produces nicotine gums, will probably be separated from the rate fixed at 18%. No differentiation has been provided by the government on the issue of manufacturers operating in excise-free manufacturing zones paying more tax under GST. Most of these manufacturers are competitive in the pharmaceutical industry is due to the excise benefit as they are situated in remote places. Earlier, Ayurvedic drugs or medicines were charged an average VAT of 4% and excise of 1.5% due to the excise free manufacturing zone benefit. Under GST, Ayurvedic medicines could get costlier as they would be taxed at the rate of 12%.

Key words – Goods and Service Tax (GST), Indian Pharmaceutical Industry, Research

Value Added Tax (VAT), Central and State Government.

Dept. of Pharmaceutical Chemistry, Pravara Rural College of Pharmacy, Loni Tal-Rahata, Dist-
Ahmednagar-413736

Abstract

Imidazole is incorporated into many important biological molecules. The most pervasive is the amino acid histidine which has an imidazole side chain. Histidine is present in many proteins and enzymes and plays a vital part in the structure and binding functions of haemoglobin and many more processes. Imidazole has become an important part of many pharmaceuticals. Synthetic imidazoles are present in many fungicide, antiprotosual and hypertensive and many other therapeutic medications. Imidazole is a part of the theophylline molecule and found in tea and coffee beans which stimulates CNS. Apart from its use, imidazole has many industrial applications too. The synthesized compounds were tested for their preliminary tests, physical constants, TLC, IR, ¹H-NMR Spectra and CHN analysis confirmed the structures of the final compounds.

All the Compounds were evaluated for Anti-microbial, Anti-inflammatory activity. The synthesized compounds shows better Anti-inflammatory activity with 69.66% inhibition and it was found comparable with Standard drug ibuprofen.

Keywords: Imidazole, Anti-microbial, Anti-Tubercular, Anti-inflammatory activity.

Isolation, Characterization And Evaluation Of Tamarindus Indica Linn Whole Plant For Possible Anticancer Activity
Yogesh Shankar Katare^{*1}, Waghmode N.B.¹, S.S.Shyale¹
SBPVT's Parikrama College Of Pharmacy, Kashti, Tal - Shrigonda, Dist - Ahmednagar

Evidence or science-based approach for prevention and treatment of diseases by using herb is known as phytotherapy. A large number of plants are yet to be screened scientifically. Cancer is Life threatening disease. There is need of new molecule for cancer treatment with minimal side effects. This improves quality of life of the patient and cost effectiveness. So by considering this we have taken this work which includes evaluation of the plant material and different extract of plant material particularly of leaves of T. indica. Pharmacological screening by which include toxicity studies, antioxidant, immunomodulatory and anticancer activity of the dried extract. Pharmacological screening and structural elucidation of active constituents. The study might throw light on various aspects like antioxidant and immunomodulatory potential for prevention and treatment in cancer. The community may also understand that the T.indica is potential for phytotherapy. Literature review, collection and identification of plant material is in process.

Pharmacognostic Evaluation of Azadirachta indica leaves
Sunil Ashokrao Nirmal^{*}
Department of Pharmacognosy, Pravara Rural College of Pharmacy, Loni (413736), Maharashtra, India.

Objective of present work is to study detailed pharmacognosy of the leaves of Azadirachta indica (Meliaceae). This plant is present in Indian system of medicine. Macroscopy, microscopy, physicochemical analysis, preliminary pharmacological testing and TLC analysis of powder of the plant leaf and/or extracts for the standardization was done as per standard methods. Morphological study showed that leaves are alternate and imparipinnate. Leaflets are subopposite and unequal at base. Microscopical study showed that epidermis at both surface is covered with thick cuticle. Stomata are present towards both the epidermis thus it is isobilateral type of leaf. Some secretory cells are found at upper epidermis. Lower epidermis consist of Ranunculaceae type of stomata which is absent in upper epidermis. Glandular covering trichomes are found in powder microscopy. Preliminary phytochemical screening ascertains the presence of steroids, triterpenes, flavonoids, tannins, carbohydrates, saponins and flavonoids in ethanol extract. Thin layer chromatography study for the presence of steroids, triterpenes, flavonoids and tannins were studied. It can be concluded that the pharmacognostic profile of Azadirachta indica leaves is helpful in developing standards for quality, sample identification.
